ABSTRACT

The publication contains information derived from a December '72-January '73 survey of institutions of higher education. Of 262 schools receiving questionnaires, 170 responded. Responses are compiled without editing or revision. They indicated the number of schools offering programs of special interest to American Indian students and Indian affairs programs which may be open to non-Indian students as well. They also indicate the number of programs offered on the reservations or in Indian communities. The raw survey responses are given alphabetically by state, with the following exceptions: Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Washington, D.C., were placed together under the heading "New England"; and Texas, Nevada, and Georgia also appear together. The survey is to be used by those planning programs involving American Indian administrators, faculty, and students. It is hoped that the data recorded here will encourage communication and exchange of curricula and program designs among schools. (Author/FF)

PREFACE

This publication contains information derived from a survey of institutions of higher education made in December 1972-January 1973. Of 262 schools sent questionnaires, 170 responded.

The responses have been compiled herein without editing or revision. They indicate the number of schools offering programs of special interest to American Indian students and programs concerning American Indian affairs which may be open to non-Indian students as well as Indians. They also indicate the number of Indian faculty and administrators, and the number of programs offered on the reservations or in Indian communities.

The raw survey responses are given alphabetically by state, with the following space-saving exceptions: Connecticut, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, and Washington, D.C., were placed together under the heading "New England"; and Texas, Nevada, and Georgia appear together also.

The survey is intended primarily for use by those planning programs involving American Indian administrators, faculty, and students. It is hoped that the data recorded here will encourage communication and exchange of curricula and program designs among schools.
